To the Honorable, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Abdullah E. Al-Harbi, the petitioner herein, prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia entered in the above-entitled case on June 11, 1996.

OPINION BELOW

On June 11, 1996, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia issued its opinion, affirming the decision of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. The court of appeals opinion is reported at 85 F.3d 680.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

Petitioner seeks review of the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and its judgment of June 11, 1996. That judgment affirmed the lower court's decision. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTE INVOLVED

The Federal Arbitration Act:

> UNITED STATES CODE ANNOTATED
> TITLE 9. ARBITRATION
> CHAPTER 1 — GENERAL PROVISIONS
> Current through P.L. 104-18, approved 7-7-95
> Section 10. Same; vacation; grounds; rehearing

(a) In any of the following cases the United States court in and for the district wherein the award was made may make an order vacating the award upon the application of any party to the arbitration —

(1) Where the award was procured by corruption, fraud, or undue means.

(2) Where there was evident partiality or corruption in the arbitrators, or either of them.

(3) Where the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct in refusing to postpone the hearing, upon sufficient cause shown, or in refusing to hear evidence pertinent and material to the controversy; or of any other misbehavior by which the rights of any party have been prejudiced.

(4) Where the arbitrators exceeded their powers, or so imperfectly executed them that a mutual, final, and definite award upon the subject matter submitted was not made.

(5) Where an award is vacated and the time within which the agreement required the award to be made has not expired the court may, in its discretion, direct a rehearing by the arbitrators.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is a case to vacate an arbitration award pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act. The specific ground for appeal here is the split of authority among the federal circuits as to whether an arbitrator has a duty to make a reasonable investigation to discover and disclose conflicts of interest which may constitute "evident partiality" as that term is used in the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. § 10(a)(2).

The trial court had subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 1332, since this action is between a citizen of the United States and citizens of foreign countries; and the amount in controversy exceeds $100,000, exclusive of interest and costs. In particular, the Petitioner, Abdullah E. Al-Harbi, is a citizen of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia; the Respondent Citibank, N.A. is a United States bank association with its principal place of business at 399 Park Avenue, New York, New York; and Respondent Citibank, a.s. is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Citibank Overseas Investment Corporation with its principal place of business at Evropska 178, 166 40 Prague 6, Czech Republic. Venue was proper pursuant to 9 U.S.C. § 11 because the arbitration decision was issued in Washington, D.C.

The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia had subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 41, since this was an appeal from a final judgment of the United States District Court For The District Of Columbia.

The case arises out of an underlying dispute between Mr. Al-Harbi, a citizen of Saudi Arabia; Citibank N.A., an American financial institution; and Citibank's wholly owned Czech Republic subsidiary, Citibank a.s. Mr. Al-Harbi alleges that the banks breached their fiduciary duty constructively through fraud, deceit, and/or misrepresented material facts which caused

Mr. Al-Harbi, a customer of the bank, to purchase a 50% interest in certain real estate in the Czech Republic at a price of $5,985,000 US that had sold the previous year for only $34,000 US. The owner of the property, coincidentally, owed Citibank overdue purchase money notes of approximately $5,830,000 US. Unknown to Al-Harbi, his purchase money allowed Citibank to recover its impending loss on these vastly under-secured notes.

Upon discovering these facts, Mr. Al-Harbi demanded recompense. When efforts to mediate the dispute proved to be ineffective, the parties entered into a written arbitration Submission Agreement, wherein they agreed to have the dispute "formally and finally resolved by binding mediation," i.e., arbitration, by a sole arbitrator.

The arbitrator failed to make a pre-arbitration investigation which would have disclosed that his former law firm, where he had been a partner for thirteen years, and in which he had a continuing financial interest, represented Citibank as a long-time client. Not being aware of the conflict of interest, Al-Harbi accepted the arbitrator's representation that he would be impartial, and proceeded with the arbitration.

The arbitration was a so-called "baseball" format, where the arbitrator hears both sides' presentations, then chooses one side's number. In this case, the Submission Agreement allowed the arbitrator to add or subtract up to $500,000 from the number chosen. An evidentiary hearing was conducted, and in his written decision, the arbitrator chose Citibank's number of $600,000 and added $500,000, for a total award to Al-Harbi of $1,100,000, thus leaving him with a loss of approximately $4,800,000 US.

After the award was rendered, the fact of the law firm's representation of Citibank, and of the arbitrator's failure to make an investigation surfaced. Pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act, Al-Harbi filed a motion in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to vacate the award on the ground, inter alia, of failure to investigate and disclose a conflict of interest which would constitute "evident partiality" pursuant to 9 U.S.C. § 10(a)(2). The trial court denied the motion; the circuit court affirmed the trial court's decision, and this appeal resulted.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

There is a split of authority among the federal circuits that creates confusion concerning the extent of an arbitrator's duty to investigate for possible conflicts of interest. Due to the ever-growing importance of arbitration in the business community, this split should be resolved.

Throughout the United States and across the world, arbitration and mediation are favored as means to resolve disputes outside of court litigation. It is well-settled that federal policy strongly favors arbitration. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Byrd, 470 U.S. 213, 105 S. Ct. 1238, 84 L. Ed. 2d 158 (1985). Commercial enterprises have become acutely aware of the overcrowding of court dockets, the priority given to criminal cases over civil cases, and the resulting costs, time, and vagaries of court litigation. In the United States, the arbitration of commercial disputes has been growing exponentially over the past few years. Fitzgerald and Groff, "Challenging Arbitration Awards", 89-4 Construction Briefings (March, 1989). Parties to all sorts of commercial agreements, large and small, now look to alternative means of dispute resolution to provide adjudicators who are not only experienced in the particular fields involved, but who will render impartial awards. Implicit in this process is the parties' reliance on the system to provide adjudicators who are not only experienced, but who are also impartial. It is imperative that parties to arbitration agreements have reason to believe that the law will insure them a "fair shake" when they agree to give up their right to a court trial and submit disputes to arbitration, mediation, or some other form of alternative dispute procedure.

The split of authority among the federal circuits creates confusion concerning the extent of an arbitrator's duty to investigate for possible conflicts of interest, having the potential of creating doubt among arbitrators as to what their duties are; and suspicion among parties, that the law does not provide fair, impartial adjudicators in alternative dispute resolution procedures.

There is no question that arbitrators have a duty to disclose conflicts of interest that "might create an impression of possible bias." Commonwealth Coatings Corp. v. Continental Casualty Co., 393 U.S. 145, 149, 89 S. Ct. 337, 339-40, 21 L. Ed. 2d 301 (1968). The issue is whether an arbitrator must make a reasonable investigation to determine such conflicts of interest, or can he simply rely on his present memory, and only disclose conflicts of interest evidencing actual bias or improper motive.

One line of cases holds that it is the parties themselves who must judge the partiality of the arbitrators, thus, arbitrators have a duty to investigate and disclose conflicts of interest which may potentially create an impression of bias. The Ninth Circuit held in Schmitz v. Zilveti, 20 F.3d 1043 (9th Cir. 1994) that "an arbitrator may have a duty to investigate independent of its . . . duty to disclose," and further observed that "[a] violation of this independent duty to investigate may result in a failure to disclose that creates a reasonable impression of partiality." 20 F.3d at 1048. In Schmitz, the Ninth Circuit clearly stated the strong public policy underlying the reasoning of this line of cases requiring pre-arbitration investigation and disclosure:

Though lack of knowledge may prohibit actual bias, it does not always prohibit a reasonable impression of partiality. As Appellants argue, an arbitrator may have a duty to investigate independent of its Commonwealth Coatings duty to disclose. A violation of this independent duty to investigate may result in a failure to disclose that creates a reasonable impression of partiality under Commonwealth Coatings. For instance, the parties can expect a lawyer/arbitrator to investigate and disclose conflicts he has with actual parties to the arbitration. Close v. Motorists Mut. Ins. Co., 21 Ohio App. 3d 228, 486 N.E. 2d 1275 (1985) (holding that the failure to do so created a reasonable impression of partiality under Commonwealth Coatings).

* * *

In the typical lawyer/arbitrator's case, lack of knowledge of a conflict may preclude a finding of actual bias. However, a reasonable impression of partiality can form when an actual conflict of interest exists and the lawyer has constructive knowledge of it. 486 N.E. 2d at 1278-79. That the lawyer forgot to run a conflict check or had forgotten that he had previously represented the party is not an excuse. See In re Siegal, 153 N.Y.S. 2d 673 (Sup. Ct. 1956). Also, an arbitrator may not know facts of which he may have been suspicious or of which he was on notice which, if true, would create a reasonable > impression of partiality if not investigated and disclosed.

> Requiring arbitrators to make investigations in certain circumstances gives arbitrators an incentive to be forthright with the parties, honestly disclosing what arbitrators might otherwise have an incentive to hide. Commonwealth Coatings establishes that the parties rather than the arbitrators or the courts should be the judges of the partiality of arbitrators: 20 F.3d 1048.

The contrasting line of cases holds that arbitrators have no duty to investigate, and must disclose only those conflicts of interest they have actual present knowledge of, and would constitute actual bias or improper motives. This line is represented by Peoples Security Life Insurance Company v. Monumental Life Insurance Company, 991 F.2d 141 (4th Cir. 1993). The Fourth Circuit held that "[t]he party asserting evident partiality has the burden of proof" and "The alleged partiality must be 'direct, definite, and capable of demonstration rather than remote, uncertain, or speculative.' " (quoting Health Serv. Management Corp. v. Hughes, 975 F.2d 1253, 1264 (7th Cir. 1992)). This standard requires evidence of actual bias or improper motive on the part of the arbitrator before the arbitrator's award can be challenged on the basis of "evident partiality." In the instant case the Court of Appeals recognized the split of authority, but opted to follow the standard of actual bias iterated by the Fourth Circuit:

> We of course are not bound by the Ninth Circuit's decision —

> We agree with the Fourth Circuit that "the burden on a claimant for vacation of an arbitration award due to 'evident partiality' is heavy, and the claimant must establish specific facts that indicate improper motives on the part of an arbitrator."

85 F.3d 683. Thus, there is a split of authority as to whether an arbitrator must make a reasonable investigation to discover and disclose conflicts of interest bearing on "evident partiality." Only the Supreme Court can resolve the dichotomy.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons this petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Before: WALD, SILBERMAN and SENTELLE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion for the Court filed by Circuit Judge SENTELLE.

Separate concurring opinion filed by Circuit Judge SILBERMAN.

SENTELLE, Circuit Judge: Abdullah E. Al-Harbi appeals from the District Court's order denying his prayer to vacate an arbitration award. We hold that the District Court properly applied the narrow standard applicable to review of arbitration awards under the Federal Arbitration Act. We therefore affirm.

I.

Al-Harbi, a citizen of Saudi Arabia, alleges that Citibank, a.s., a wholly-owned subsidiary of appellee Citibank, N.A., organized under the laws of the Czech republic, either defrauded him or breached a fiduciary duty toward him in a transaction in which he paid $5,985,000 U.S. for a fifty percent interest in real estate in the Czech republic, as a result of which he claims to have stood losses of up to $7.5 million U.S. After months of negotiation, the parties entered into nonbinding mediation before Kenneth R. Feinberg in London, England, on October 6-7, 1994. When it became clear that the nonbinding mediation would not be successful, the parties agreed to a binding arbitration. Though Feinberg recommended several possible arbitrators, in the interest of a speedy resolution, the parties agreed to Feinberg himself conducting the arbitration immediately under a "baseball" format, in which the arbitrator hears both sides' presentations, then chooses one side's number. They further agreed to a modification of the baseball format to the extent that the arbitrator could add or subtract up to $500,000 to or from the number chosen. Feinberg chose Citibank's number of $600,000 and added $500,000, for a total award to Al-Harbi of $1,100,000.

Al-Harbi, dissatisfied with the award, brought this action in the District Court to vacate the arbitration award. After receiving all proffered submissions from both parties, the District Court entered its order denying Al-Harbi's relief. He brought the present appeal.

II.

The Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA"), 9 U.S.C. § 10 (1994), empowers a federal court to vacate an arbitration award only

> (1) Where the award was procured by corruption, fraud, or undue means.
> (2) Where there was evident partiality or corruption in the arbitrators, or either of them.
> (3) Where the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct in refusing to postpone the hearing, upon sufficient cause shown, or in refusing to hear evidence pertinent and material to the controversy; or of any other misbehavior by which the rights of any party have been prejudiced.

Courts have also recognized a limited nonstatutory ground for vacating an arbitration award where the arbitrator has acted in "manifest disregard of the law." Kanuth v. Prescott, Ball & Turben, Inc., 949 F.2d 1175, 1178 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (citing Wilko v. Swan, 346 U.S. 427, 436 (1953) (dicta)). Although Al-Harbi launched a multi-faceted attack on the arbitration award in District Court, the only proffered grounds for vacatur warranting specific mention here are (1) that the arbitrator exhibited "evident partiality"; and (2) that the arbitrator exhibited "manifest disregard of the law." He has not shown, either in the District Court or on appeal, any adequate basis for vacatur on either of these grounds.

A.

Appellant's "evident partiality" argument is based on the fact that Feinberg's former law firm had represented Citibank on matters unrelated to the mediation or the underlying dispute. Appellant emphasizes that Feinberg did not disclose this representation to the parties to the mediation, but it is undisputed that Feinberg did not have knowledge of the representation at the time of the arbitration. Appellant's argument therefore depends on the proposition that Feinberg had a duty to make inquiry as to whether or not his former law firm had ever had any connection with any of the parties to the arbitration and thereafter make disclosure of the results. We can find no source for any such generalized duty.

In support of his contention that such a duty exists, Al-Harbi relies on Schmitz v. Zilveti, 20 F.3d 1043 (9th Cir. 1994). In Schmitz, the Ninth Circuit reversed a district court's judgment upholding an arbitration award where the arbitrator's law firm had represented a subsidiary of one of the parties in at least nineteen cases over a period of thirty-five years, the most recent having ended approximately twenty-one months before the arbitration. The Schmitz court stated that "an arbitrator may have a duty to investigate independent of its . . . duty to disclose," and further observed that "[a] violation of this independent duty to investigate may result in a failure to disclose that creates a reasonable impression of partiality." 20 F.3d at 1048.

We of course are not bound by the Ninth Circuit's decision, and in any event, find it distinguishable both on its facts and the applicable law. In Schmitz, the arbitrator was conducting the proceedings under the National Association of Securities Dealers ("NASD") code, which required him "to make such an investigation regarding the actual parties to th[e] arbitration." Id. In the present case, not only does the NASD code not apply, but the alleged evident partiality arises not from a representation by any firm with which the arbitrator was connected at the time of the arbitration, but from representation in unrelated matters by a firm with which his only continuing connection was, concededly, an interest in receivables, none of which were generated by any party connected with the arbitration. Thus, even if Schmitz were our own decision, it would not answer the question before us today.

Only our decisions and those of the Supreme Court bind us as precedent, and neither we nor the highest court have yet considered whether a duty of investigation underlies the arbitrator's duty to disclose facts that "might create an impression of possible bias." Commonwealth Coatings Corp. v. Continental Casualty Co., 393 U.S. 145, 149 (1968). Lacking binding precedent, the District Court in the present case relied heavily on an earlier opinion by another district judge in this circuit. Overseas Private Inv. Corp. v. Anaconda Co., 418 F. Supp. 107 (D.D.C. 1976) ("OPIC"). In OPIC, Judge Flannery held that where no reasonable person could find the arbitrator "to have known any potentially prejudicial information" prior to the award, there was no basis for a conclusion of evident partiality and he affirmed the arbitration award. Id. at 112.

The Fourth Circuit considered the duty of disclosure issue on facts more analogous to those before us than were those in the Ninth Circuit's decision. In Peoples Security Life Insurance Company v. Monumental Life Insurance Company, 991 F.2d 141 (4th Cir. 1993), that court reached the same conclusion as Judge Flannery in OPIC. In the Peoples Security case, the arbitrator worked in the Newark, New Jersey, and New York, New York, offices of the LeBoeuf law firm. 991 F.2d at 143. An attorney named James Nolan joined the Washington office of the same firm in May of 1990. He had signed an initial complaint on behalf of one of the parties to the arbitration under review in Peoples Security at a time while he was a partner in a different law firm. 991 F.2d at 145. The final portion of the arbitration occurred after Nolan joined the LeBoeuf firm. Id.

While not specifically addressing whether the arbitrator's duty to disclose incorporates the duty of investigation advanced by appellant here, in reasoning applicable to the instant case, the Fourth Circuit held that "[t]he party asserting evident partiality has the burden of proof." 991 F.2d at 146. The circuit further iterated, "The alleged partiality must be 'direct, definite, and capable of demonstration rather than remote, uncertain, or speculative.' " Id. (quoting Health Serv. Management Corp. v. Hughes, 975 F.2d 1253, 1264 (7th Cir. 1992)). We agree with the Fourth Circuit that "the burden on a claimant for vacation of an arbitration award due to 'evident partiality' is heavy, and the claimant must establish specific facts that indicate improper motives on the part of an arbitrator." 991 F.2d at 146. In light of this onerous standard for vacatur, we affirm the District Court's refusal to vacate the arbitration award, and as did the District Court in the present case and in OPIC, we hold that, nothing else appearing, the fact that an arbitrator has not conducted an investigation sufficient to uncover the existence of facts marginally disclosable under the Commonwealth Coatings duty is not sufficient to warrant vacating an arbitration award for evident partiality. That is, we explicitly hold that there is no duty on an arbitrator to make any such investigation.

B.

Appellant's argument that the District Court should have vacated the arbitration award on the non-statutory ground that the arbitrator demonstrated "manifest disregard" of the applicable law is totally meritless. This basis for vacatur traces its lineage to language in Wilco v. Swan, 346 U.S. at 436-37,[1] stating that "interpretations of the law by the arbitrators in contrast to manifest disregard are not subject, in the federal courts, to judicial review for error in interpretation." 346 U.S. at 436-37 (emphasis added). Plainly, this non-statutory theory of vacatur cannot empower a District Court to conduct the same de novo review of questions of law that an appellate court exercises over lower court decisions. Indeed, we have in the past held that "it is clear that [manifest disregard] means more than error or misunderstanding with respect to the law." Kanuth, 949 F.2d at 1178. What appellant styles as "manifest disregard" in the present case does not readily appear even erroneous.

1. Although the holding in Wilco was overruled by Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/American Express, Inc., 490 U.S. 477 (1989), the dicta that constitutes the core of appellant's argument was unaffected by the grounds of the overruling.

Appendix A

The submission agreement under which the arbitrator decided the controversy mandated that the arbitrator would apply "the procedural and substantive laws of the Southern District of New York, U.S.A." The arbitrator ruled that jurisdiction would be difficult to establish in New York, but even assuming that it could be established, "this case would be dismissed on the ground of forum non conveniens." Arbitration Memorandum at 10. The crux of appellant's argument is not that the arbitrator disregarded New York law in determining that a New York court would dismiss on forum non conveniens, but only that forum non conveniens is procedural law and that the arbitrator was obligated to apply "the procedural and substantive law of New York (not "or substantive law')." Appellant's Brief at 25. Appellant's argument then depends upon the proposition that where a tribunal is to render decision based on "procedural and substantive law" that tribunal has not only erred, but acted in manifest disregard of the law if it finds that procedural factors are dispositive of the case without then going on to consider substantive law rendered apparently moot by that procedural decision. To state that proposition is to reject it. We find no basis for vacatur.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, we affirm the order of the District Court denying vacatur of the arbitration award.

Appendix A

SILBERMAN, Circuit Judge, concurring: I concur in the panel's opinion. I do not think an arbitrator has a duty—at least absent governing rules such as the NASD provision applied in Schmitz—to search his former law firm's client list to determine whether one of the parties before him had been a client of his former law firm. We should bear in mind that arbitrators, unlike judges, are chosen by the parties, and any extensive duty to investigate the client list of former law firms, or even perhaps a very large present law firm, will just increase the costs. Of course, the parties can request such a search, but that is a different matter. I do not think, however, that the absence of any particular duty can be explained—as does the Fourth Circuit in People's Security—in terms of the burden of proof on the party seeking to overturn the award. Obviously, if a duty to investigate existed, the burden of proof would have been met by establishing that the arbitrator failed to perform it.
